On the Retrogression of the Arhat in the Abhidharmakośa

Seiki Miyashita

i) Introduction

"All things past, future and present exist", "Arhat retrogresses"these characterize the views of the Vaibhāşikas or the Sarvāstivādins¹). The former statement is the basis for the latter.

ii) Vasubandhu's argument for non-retrogression of the Arhat in the Abhidharmakośa-bhāsya (ABh)

In the sixth chapter of ABh Vasubandhu argues for the non-retrogression of the Arhat. His argument consists of three parts: (A) scriptural authority, (B) logical reasoning, and (C) application. He adduces seven sūtras and a *śāstra*². Through them he re-interpretes in his own way the descriptions of the Arhat given in the scriptures and some of which have been used by the Vaibhāṣikas to support their description of the Arhat³. So the most substantial Vasubandhu's position can be more clearly understood by following the controversy between Sanghabhadra and Sthiramati.

The first two satras adduced in (A), and the text of (B), which form the core of the controversy, are as follows;

(A) 1: "O monks, what has been destroyed by holy insight (ārya-prajñā) is what has been destroyed."

(A) 2: "I declare the need for earnestness (apramāda-karaņīya) by the Śaikṣa when there is need for earnestness."

(B): If there arises to the Arhat an antidote (pratipaksa) by which his passions are completely [transformed into] the nature of non-arising (anutpatti-dharmatā), then how can he retrogress? [On the other hand,] if it doesn't arise, then how can he be one who has destroyed the defilement (ksinåsrava)? This is because he has not completely uprooted the nature of the seeds (bija-dharmatā) of passions. How much less can those who have not destroyed the defilement be an Arhat?

On the Retrogression of the Arhat (S. Miyashita)

(13)

iii) Sanghabhadra's Criticism of Vasubandhu

Sanghabhadra criticizes in great detail each item of (A), (B) and (C) set forth by Vasubandhu. Sanghabhadra's main points can be found in Sthiramati's Tattvārtha (Sth).

(A) 1^1 : Concerning the destructions [of passions] brought about by the worldly way (laukika-mārga), [even he who has reached] the eighth stage [of attainment (samāpatti)], he will be united with the sinful state (durgati) later on. An example of this is Udrakarāmaputra. But the destruction [of passions] by the undefiled [way] (anāsrava-mārga) is different. This is because he will not be united with the next existence (punar-bhava) when he retrogresses from Arhat-ship (arhattva). Therefore it is declared, "O monks, what has.....been destroyed"⁴).

(A) 2^1 : As regards the statement on the need for earnestness by the Śaikṣa, [although it is certain that earnestness is] not needed by the Arhat but by him [i. s. Śaikṣa], it is [so stated] because the Śaikṣa, even one who has detached (vitarāga) from upto [the stage of] the sphere of nothingness (ākimcanyāyatana), will be reborn in the realm of form (rāpa-dhātu) when he retrogresses. Furthermore it is also because the next existence will never materialize (abhinir/vrt) to the Aśaikṣa when he retrogresses. Therefore the need for earnestness is not declared for him⁵).

 $(B)^1$: [When the Yogin who, before becoming an Ārya, destroyed the passions of the realm of desire ($k\bar{a}m\hat{a}vacara$)] by the worldly way [reaches the way of contemplation ($bh\bar{a}van\bar{a}$ -m $\bar{a}rga$),] he acquires either of the two results [i. e. of Sakrdāgāmin and Anāgāmin]. Now if you consider that the nature of the seeds of passions which obstruct those [two, results] has been completely uprooted [by the worldly way], then retrogression from Arhat-ship would be possible because [Arhat-ship] is also determined in the same way [i. e. the seeds is completely uprooted] as the two results. For, [as there arise the passions again to those who have gained the two results even though the seeds have been completely uprooted, so] you should admit that passions would arise to the Arhat again even if the seeds have been completely uprooted by the antidote. [On the contrary,] if you consider that the result of Anāgāmin will be acquired even though the seeds of passions of the realm of desire is not yet completely uprooted, then how can the result of Anāgāmin be acquired without uprooting the nature of the seeds of passions of the realm of desire. For it is the result of Sakrdāgāmin which should be acquired if the seeds of passions of the realm of desire to be destroyed by the way of contemplation has not been completely uprooted by the worldly way. Therefore, for this reason, the retrogression [from Arhat-ship] must be accepted⁶).

- 1029 -

On the Retrogression of the Arhat (S. Miyashita)

(14)

iv) Sthiramati's Reply to Sanghabhadra

Sanghabhadra's argument of (B)¹ is attacked by Sthiamti.

 $(B)^2$: [Sanghabhadra's argument is not valid] because there are two kinds of destruction, i. e. the destruction of activity (samudācāra-prahāņa) and the destruction of seed (bīja-prahāņa), which are brought about by the worldly way and the supra-worldly way (lokottara-mārga) respectively. As regards that [i. e. the acquirement of the result of Anāgāmin without uprooting the seeds of passions of the realm of desire, that has no fault] because [there can be a situation wherein] the passions of the lower stage are suppressed (vi√skambh) leaving the seeds not uprooted while the passions of the higher stage are active. And since Āryas who are born there [i. e. in the higher stage] have destroyed the passions to be destroyed by the way of seeing (darśana-mārga), they will not descend to the lower stage again. When all the seeds of passions of the three realms to be destroyed by the way of contemplation are uprooted by the undefiled way, they will attain Arhat-ship. Thus, what contradiction is there in the case where one who has retrogressed [from a particular virtue], attains (prati√vyadh) [it] again due to his extreme loathing [of the passions]?⁷)

v) Conclusions

From the foregoing it is clear that the dispute centers on the exact definition of the destruction of passions. According to the Vaibhāsikas the distinction between 'destroyed' and 'undestroyed' resides in the acquisition (prapti). Thus 'separated from the acquisitions of passions' and 'not separated' mean 'destroyed' and 'undestroyed' respectively⁸). However, Vasubandhu distinguishes them by means of the difference of the body $(asraya-visesa)^{9}$. The difference results from the undefiled way¹⁰). The body is converted (paravrtta) so that it has no efficiency for the passions to sprout again.

On the Retrogression of the Arhat (S. Miyashita) (15)

As we have already made clear Vasubandhu's and Sthiramati's arguments of the destruction of passions based on the seed-theory in (B) and (B)², we will consider the acquisition-theory of the Vaibhāşikas.

The Vaibhāşikas argue that the acquisition is in itself a particular entity (dravyantara) and it is a substantial dharma (dravyantara). Then, because the acquisition-dharma itself has no characteristic mark, there is no difference in the destructions, no matter whether it is brought about by the worldly way or by the supra-worldly way. And also, even if the passions are destroyed, the substantiality of the passion-dharma is never annihilated because destruction only means separation of acquisition-dharma. Therefore, for the Arhat also the passion-dharma, though destroyed, exists in the past. This is precisely the point of Vaibhāşika's argument.

The Vibhāṣā says;

Because the past [passion-dharma] exists, if the conditions for retrogression are satisfied, then the future passion-dharma is brought about with [the past passion-dharma as] the cause¹¹).

cf. J. Takakusu, The Abhidharma Literature of the Sarvāstivādins, Journal of the PTS, 1904-1905, p. 69 n. 1.

²⁾ The passages in question in Tibetan, Chinese and Pāli; (A) 1: ABh 375. 11-12; Śamathadeva's Upāyika-nāma-Abhidharmakośațīkā (Up), Peking ed. v. 118, 66b4-67a2. (A) 2: ABh 375. 13; Up 67a2-68a3; Samyuktāgama (SĀ), Taisho (T) ed. v. 2, 53c; Samyutta-nikāya (SN), PTS ed. 4.124 Devadahasutta; cf. Madhyamāgama (MĀ) 1. 749c 阿湿具経; MN 1. 473 Kīţāgirisutta. (A) 3: ABh 375. 15-16; Up 68a3-8; Yaśomitra's Sphuțārtha (Yaś), Wogihara ed. 588. 29-589. 6; SN 2. 239 Bhikkhusutta; cf. MĀ 1. 738a 大空経; MN 3. 109 Mahāsuññatasutta. (A) 4: ABh 376 4-6; Up 68b1-70b1; SĀ 2. 286a & 2. 382c; SN 1. 120 Godhikasutta; Dhammapada comm. 1. 431 Godhikattheraparinibbānavatthu; cf. Sth, Peking ed. v. 146, 147 (1-385a=v. 146, p. 193-v. 147, p. 54; 01-0565a=v. 147, pp. 55-282) 0414b4-8. (A) 5: ABh 376. 7-8 Daśottarasūtra; Up 70b1-7; Sth 0415a2-6; DĀ 1. 52c十上経 & 1. 233b十報法経; DN 3. 272 Dasuttarasutta. (A) 6: ABh 376. 14-16; Prakaranapāda, T ed. 26. 637b12-13 (No. 1541), 702b16-19 (No. 1542); cf. ABh 305. 14-306. 1; Yaś 485. 2-13; Sth 0299a1-b4; Sanghabhadra's Nyāyānusāra (San) T 29. 638c8-639b4; Abhidharmadīpa, P. S. Jaini ed. p. 295-296. (C) 1; Angāra-karsūpamasūtra @ ABh 376. 20-22, @' ABh 378. 7-8, (b) ABh 376. 22–377. 1, (b' ABh 376. 2. (@) and @' as well as ((b) and ((b)' are joined together in a sentence or in a paragraph.); Up 70b7-74b1; Sth 0417a4-b3, b5-0418a1; SĀ 2. 314a; SN 4. 188 Dukkhadhammasutta; cf. Yas 455. 20-22. (C) 2: ABh 377. 1-2; Up 74b1-75a2; Sth 0418a3-8; SĀ 2. 188b; AN 4. 223 Dutiyabalasutta. In this sātra (C) 1 (b) is adduced as a bala of the Arhat.

3) In adducing (A) 3, Vasubandhu gives his own interpretation on it as follows: 1) sāmayikī-vimukti does not refer to the virtue of the Arhat (cf. ABh 387. 14–20), but to dhyāna-samādhi i. e. drsta-dharma-sukha-vihāra. And asāmayikī-vimukti refers to arhattva. Therefore it is not from arhattva but from samādhi that the Arhat retrogresses. 2) The gotras of Arhat are explained in the same way i. e. from the point of indriyas and of the retrogression from drsta-dharma-sukha-vihāra. cf. ABh 375. 16–376. 4.

On the other hand, (A) 4 is a scriptural authority in favor of the retrogression of Arhat. This makes reference to Gautika's retrogression from sāmayikt-vimukti. While the Vaibhāşika regards him to have attained arhattva because only Arhats possess vimukti, Vasubandhu regards him as a Śaikṣa because both Arhats and Śaikṣas can possess sāmayikī-vimukti as samādhi. cf. Vibhāṣā T 27. 312b (No. 1545), 28. 235b, c (No. 1546). De la Vallée Poussin considers Gautika as a good example of cetanā-dharman. cf. French transl. of ABh ch. VI p. 262, n. 1.

The same sentences as (A) 6 are cited in ABh ch. V-34 (cf. note 2), (A) 6). There Vasubandhu explains that the three reasons for the arising of passions correspond to hetu, visaya and prayoga. Acc. to Vasubandhu the passions arises only if all three reasons are satisfied, while, acc. to the Vaibhāsikas, they arise even if only one reason is present. To illustrate this they take up the example of the retrogression of Arhat. Acc. to them, the passions will arise in an Arhat only by the force of visaya because he has destroyed all anušayas.

(C) 1 cum 2 is a very strong argument against aparihānivādins. The general idea of (C) 1 is as follows: When the Arhat retrogresses as a result of the arising of passions, he will soon destroy them, because his mind is firmly directed towards nirvāna. It is just as the flow of Gangā cannot be changed from east to west. cf. San 718c20-720a3.

- 4) Sth 0413a3-5, San 711c23-28. (A) 1¹ is cited with the words "Others say". Pūrņavardhana begins with "The Vaibhāşikas say" to cite same. cf. Peking ed. v. 118, p. 39, 248b3.
- 5) Sth 0413a5-8, San 712a10-23. 6) Sth 0416b3-7, San 711c7-14.
- 7) Sth 0416b7-0417a2. 8) ABh 63. 14-18.
- ABh 63. 18-21. cf. Sth 242a1. He says, "Here āśraya means pañca-skandha. Others say it has citta-caitta as the nature".
- 10) Sth 240b8-241a1. Here mārga is said to refer to vyavasthā-hetu.
- 11) T 27. 312c20 (No. 1545), 28. 235c16-25 (No. 1546). cf. San 712b26, 716a4-13.

(Assistant, Otani University)