A Study of Tantric Rituals in Nepalese Buddhism

Samādhi of Tārā in Saptavidhānuttarapūjā

BAJRACHARYA Manik

1. Introduction

Most of the major rituals in Newar Buddhism consist of a stage where a Vajrācārya priest contemplates the nature of a certain deity as a part of the main rites. The rite is called 'samādhi danegu' and it consists mainly of contemplating his own tutelary deity, which in most cases is the Samvara. The samādhi of Samvara, called tri-samādhi, is so common among Newar Buddhists today that it is worshipped in most of the rituals performed by Vajrācāryas, regardless of the deity in question. This is true also in the case of Saptavidhānuttarapūjā (hereafter SP), which is one of the most popular and fully developed exoteric Newar Buddhist rituals. The ritual of SP employs the Sevenfold Supreme Worship¹⁾ and the deity to be worshipped in it are in most cases Tārā, Lokeśvara, or Śākyamuni Buddha. Exceptionally, in the SP that I observed on August 28, 2004 in a private house at Lalitpur city, a samādhi of Tārā was performed instead. Depending on the ritual performed and the manuscript of the ritual manual used on that day, I will describe the samādhi below. The manuscript, which is a private collection of Dharmarāja Vajrācārya, has 43 folios with 14 lines per folio. It is dated as Nepal Era 1061 (1941) AD) and compiled by Siddhirāja Gubhāju of Būbahā, Patan.

2. The samādhi of Tārā

The $sam\bar{a}dhi$ rite is the beginning of the main rites. It is performed after the preliminary rites like $s\bar{u}ry\bar{a}rgha$ (reception of the Sun), $gurup\bar{a}d\bar{a}rgha$ (reception of the Vajrasattva and the priest), the purification, and the gurumandala. The $T\bar{a}r\bar{a}sam\bar{a}dhi$ of SP can be described in the following stages:

[I] Salutations: In the beginning, salutations are made to the triple gems. Then the Buddhas and Bodhisattvas are requested to be present in every direction.

[II] Contemplation of Mahattarītārā: A syllable $T\bar{a}m$ is visualized at the middle of a moondisk in one's own heart. Buddha and Bodhisattvas are arisen from the ray of light streamed from the syllable. Then the text describes that one should first perform exterior and interior worships $(b\bar{a}hy\bar{a}dhy\bar{a}tmyap\bar{u}j\bar{a})$ and then the sevenfold supreme worships. Then $s\bar{u}n-yat\bar{a}$ is conceived followed by the pronunciations that all the phenomena and the self are pure in nature. Then from the $T\bar{a}m$ syllable, a white utpala flower is generated in which another syllable $T\bar{a}m$ is present. From that syllable, Mahattarītārā is generated who is fully ornamented and seated cross-legged (paryanka) over a great-moon-disk $(mah\bar{a}candr\bar{a}sana)$ on a lotus. She is green in color and has no companions. She is granting boon (varada) with her right hand and holding a stalk of blue lotus $(ind\bar{v}ara)$ in the left. Then conceiving the posture of $samayamudr\bar{a}$, one visualizes oneself as Mahattarītārā. Pushpendra Kumar discusses, by referring to several labelled images, that Mahattarītārā was also known as Mahāttārāyi, and Mahat-tārā. He also gives iconographic variations of this form of Tārā as being flanked by two female companions and other one as being seated in $lalit\bar{a}sana$.

[III] Contemplation of Varadatārā: The second $sam\bar{a}dhi$ is that of Varadatārā. After contemplating $s\bar{u}nyat\bar{a}$ as in the former $sam\bar{a}dhi$, one visualizes in oneself a all-sided lotus (visvakamala) born from the syllable Pam. A green colored syllable $T\bar{a}m$ is then visualized on a moon-disk which is born from the syllable A in the middle of the lotus. Then from the syllable $T\bar{a}m$, the green colored Varadatārā is generated.

She is distinguishable by her four female companions. She is holding a water-lily (nīlot-pala) in the left hand, granting wishes (varada) in the right and seated in the ardhapary-anka posture. She is flanked by Aśokakāntā and Mahamāyurī in the right side and by Ekajatā and Āryajāmgulī in the left side. Aśokakāntā is yellow in color, and holding a branch of Aśoka tree and a Vajra with her left and right hands. Mahamāyurī, yellowish in color, holds a peacock-tail-feather (mayurapicchikā) and a yaktail-fan (cāmara) in her left and right hands. Ekajatā is dwarfish, dark colored, and holding a tiger skin (vyāghrājina). She has three eyes and terrible tusks. She has blazing hair and is also holding a chopper (kartr) and a skull-cup (kapāla). Similarly, Āryajāmgulī, green in color, is holding a black snake (kṛṣṇoraga) and a fan (cāmara) with her left and right hands. Then one visualizes these deities as oneself.

[IV] Adhiṣthāna: After that, one performs the empowering (adhiṣthāna) of the moon, the sun, one's hands, conch-shell, flowers, the bali, the ritual ground, and one's body, speech and mind, etc.

[V] Nyāsa: This is followed by nyāsa, a process where mantras of various deities are implemented into different parts of the worshipper's body. A total of 26 mantras are implemented using both right and left hands.

[VI] Ākarṣaṇa: At this point, one meditates that Āryatārā who is in the Akaniṣṭha heaven is invoked into the maṇḍala. The mantra Oṃ Tāre Tuttāre Ture Svāhā is muttered 108 times to her.

[VII] Worshipping: In the next stage, Āryatārā is worshipped with five transcendental Buddhas. It is followed by the worshipping of 40 Tārās.

[VIII] Concluding rite: At the conclusion of the samādhi, one recites praises to the transcendental Buddhas, Āryatārā, Mahattarītārā, and Prasannatārā followed by the worshipping of the crown (makuṭa).

3. Conclusion

- The $sam\bar{a}dhi$ of Mahattarītārā described in the text is almost similar to the $s\bar{a}dha-n\bar{a}$ no. 90 of the $S\bar{a}dhanam\bar{a}l\bar{a}.^{3)}$ The text misses the parts where $vikacotpalamudr\bar{a}$ is performed and the mantra $Om\ T\bar{a}re\ Tutt\bar{a}re\ Ture\ Sv\bar{a}h\bar{a}$ is muttered. On the other hand, in $S\bar{a}dhanam\bar{a}l\bar{a}$, we do not find the line where Mahattarītārā is identified with the self.
- In the second $sam\bar{a}dhi$, the text does not mention the name of the central deity. But the $s\bar{a}dhan\bar{a}$ no. 91 of $S\bar{a}dhanam\bar{a}l\bar{a}^{4)}$ is identical to the $sam\bar{a}dhi$. As in the former $sam\bar{a}dhi$, the text misses the mantra Om $T\bar{a}re$ $Tutt\bar{a}re$ Ture $Sv\bar{a}h\bar{a}$. Considering the similarity, we may assume that the $sam\bar{a}dhis$ of both the $T\bar{a}r\bar{a}s$ were extracted to this SP text from the $S\bar{a}dhanam\bar{a}l\bar{a}$.
- The process of nyāsa in this samādhi is different than that of the trisamādhi. In the trisamādhi⁵, 24 seed syllables are implemented in 24 parts of the body (catur-vimśaty-aṅga-nyāsa) using the middle finger of the right hand. In the case of present samādhi, 26 mantras are implemented using both right and left hands.
